PRODUCT DESCRIPTION

This captivating set features three hand-painted, 18th-century Dutch Delft tiles, each exquisitely framed. The tiles depict a narrative scene centered around a hunter and his loyal dogs in a pastoral landscape. The central piece showcases a hunter, clad in period attire, holding a trumpet. His posture suggests he's either calling out to his dogs or signaling the start of a hunt, a scene rich with historical ambiance. Below, one of the tiles portrays a hunting dog in a serene stance, surrounded by lush foliage. The detailed brushwork captures the dog's attentiveness, as if listening for the next command. The final tile features another hunting dog in a similar landscape, with trees and bushes framing the composition. The dog's stance echoes the stillness of the moment, adding to the overall sense of anticipation and focus. Each tile is set within a dark wood frame that complements the vivid yet earthy tones of the tiles, enhancing their visual impact. The intricate floral and scroll designs in the corners of each tile reflect the traditional Dutch decorative style, adding a touch of elegance to the rustic scene. The tiles exhibit the characteristic crackling of the glaze, a testament to their age and authenticity, with minor chips adding to their charm. These tiles not only serve as beautiful decorative pieces but also offer a glimpse into the rich history of Dutch ceramic art.
