PRODUCT DESCRIPTION

19th Century French Butcher Table with Carved Marble Top France, late 19th century This exceptional French butcher's table features a richly carved marble top resting on an elegant wrought-iron base. The thick marble surface is finely worked with recessed panels and geometric detailing, a level of craftsmanship that elevates this utilitarian form into a decorative statement piece. Such marble tops were prized for their durability, hygienic qualities, and resistance to heat—essential in professional food preparation settings. The base is composed of hand-forged iron with sweeping scrollwork, circular stretchers, and turned brass accents, reflecting the refined industrial design typical of late 19th-century French workshops. The sculptural ironwork provides both structural integrity and visual balance beneath the substantial stone top. Small original casters remain, allowing for mobility within the workspace, a practical feature of butcher and market tables of the period. Originally used in a French boucherie or market setting, this table now lends itself beautifully to contemporary interiors as a kitchen island, console, or a dining table. The combination of carved marble and decorative ironwork exemplifies the French tradition of marrying utility with artistry. Dimensions: 51.5" length × 35.5" width × 34" height
